

Council Member Robin W. Mardis

Robin was born in Birmingham, Alabama and after spending most of her young life there, the family relocated to Atlanta Georgia. She returned to Alabama to continue her education at UAB and Tuskegee University.

She later married and to that union three children were born. The oldest, Christopher, died when he was three. After the remaining children became adults and graduated from college, she moved with her husband to Tuskegee. In 2019, the family purchased a home in Franklin.

Robin worked as a contract worker for the US Drug Administration (DEA) for several years before relocating here. Not being content as a stay-at-home housewife, she returned to school and completed her degree requirements for a B.S. Degree in Communications at Tuskegee University.

Robin believes in civic duty and community involvement. Former President John F. Kennedy said it best, “Ask not what your country can do for you, ask what you can do for your country”. As such, she became a Town of Franklin Council member and works hard to move the town forward.

During her spare time, she is active in photography.
